The Corona Virus represents the end of this world and the beginning of a new one. In this moment we can see the future: everything should be free. Food, housing, healthcare and more. But capitalism forces us to work so we can pay for the things we need to survive. And working means getting the virus. This system gives us two options: stay home and starve or work and catch the virus. This is no world for the living.

The new world begins in three acts:
The first act is of mutual aid. We must care, share, and love each other in this time. Deliver food to the elderly, come together, and build stronger communities. We have been alone and scared for so long. In this act we must find each other. And when we find each other, we must prepare for the second act.

The second act is resistance. Unemployment, hunger, homelessness and disease are coming. All of us will have to make a choice: take care of each other or die in isolation. In this act we will seize vacant houses, refuse to pay rent, refuse to pay mortgages, go on strike, free the prisoners, take the food, and much much more. We will enter the crisis as caterpillars and emerge as butterflies.

The final act is the world we deserve. In this world the greatest evil - inequality - will be no more. Work as we know it will be over. This is a world where there is enough for everyone. A world where all people can have beauty, abundance, and safety in their lives. This is our destiny. This is our future. The rich and politicians are in the way.
